Interesting schools

A

Brooklyn Free School in New York, US, isn't a typical school. Students and teachers decide the rules together. Students can choose to stay at home, but they usually come to school because they love it! Students are three to eighteen years old and don't do homework or tests. They don't study in traditional classes either – teachers work with every student to decide what to study, so each student learns about things that really interest them. Some students prefer to work alone, some work on projects in groups. They choose when to hang out with friends or play.

B

Over 2,000 young people have most of their classes at a stadium in Buenos Aires, Argentina, and it's even got a university. The stadium is the home of the River Plate football team, although people do other sports there too, like basketball and swimming. Students study typical subjects, but sometimes school finishes early because there is football practice. River Plate is a really popular team and when they play a match over 70,000 people can come and watch it.

C

In Bangladesh from June to October it rains a lot. Water covers many roads and it's impossible for students to go to school. Now, they've got 111 schools, libraries and medical centres on boats that are open all year. Around 30 students have classes on each boat with one teacher. The boats have blackboards, computers and hundreds of books. Some even have small playgrounds so students can do exercise. The boat schools are in different areas and they collect their students. When all the students are on the boat, it stops and classes start. When classes finish, the boat takes them home.
